FOREWORD

Victory! Peace! These are beautiful words! But in our enjoyment of victory and peace may we never forget those boys and girls from Grady, and from all over the world, who have made sacrifices, bled, and died in order that "Peace on Earth, Good Will toward men" might be a living reality. Our gratitude to these has prompted us to make this, the fourth edition of the B. F. Grady Annual, a Victory Issue.

THE JUNIOR CLASS.

THE LITTLE ANGEL

By MARGARET JEAN HARPER

"Mommie," the child gasped.

"Yes, darling," the Mother said in a choked voice.

"Tell Daddy I," the child was silent a moment, and then turned a ghastly white.

"Nurse, Nurse!" the mother cried hysterically.

The nurse came, looked at the child, then turned and said, "Im sorry, Mrs. Richardson, we did the best we could. Would you like to lie down and rest?"

It was a sad procession that went to the funeral of little Nancy Richardson the next day. Everybody loved her; she always brightened the lives of those around her. Little Nancy—the sunshine of the whole block—was now gone.

That night as Irene Richardson sat down to write to her husband overseas, she thought of the many happy times Nancy, Jim, and she had had before Jim had gone to war.

Three thousand miles across the world, the mail was being passed out.

"Pvt. George Stevenson."

"Sgt. James Richardson," the mail clerk went on.

Jim hadn't heard from his wife in two weeks; so he had got four letters that day. He walked out to the edge of the camp and sat down on a log to read his letters. He read three of them and then opened the last one. He read:

Dearest Jim:

Remember that day on the beach when Nancy built a Castle for us?

"Mommie will be the Queen and and Daddy will be the King and I'll be what will I be, daddy?"

"You, my little darling, you will be our little princess," you said.

And we laughed as she went on planning.

The day in the country when we took our lunch and spread it on the beautiful green grass, Nancy enjoyed that day. She always did love the out-of-doors.

That day at the Circus, when Nancy ate so much ice cream she had the tummy-ache, and we had to go home early.

And last Christmas, only two or three months ago, you came home to spend it with us. I cooked the turkey and all the dressings that make Christmas. We decorated the house, and last of all, we fixed the tree.

We had everything but an angel for the top.

"I'll be your angel, Mommie," Nancy said.

She hung her stocking, and was thrilled the next morning with the things Santa had brought her.

The next day you left, and that night she knelt by her bedside and asked God to bring you safely home after the war.

Do you remember all those things, Jim? I hope so, because those will be the last. You see, Jim, Nancy is our little angel now.

It all happened so quickly. She took cold, and that turned into pneumonia. For two days she lingered between life and death. Then the third day the crisis came; nothing could be done.

I know just how you feel, Jim; I feel the same way. Please don't take it so hard, darling; there will be other children after this war.

Your loving wife,

IRENE.

Jim sat there a moment, then arose, feeling all choked up inside. He had to talk to someone—the Chaplain, of course. "Nancy"—he thought lifting his eyes heavenward—"My little Angel!"

ETERNAL FAITH

By MITTIE RUTH WALLACE

Until I joined the army my life story was just another episode in the everyday life of America which many people would glance at, remark "Too bad," and then forget. But I will never forget those days—those days which should have been my happiest ones were far from happy.

I, Joe Brown, am what most people consider a misfortune. You see the last that I heard of my father was that he was still serving a life term in prison for bank robbery and murder. Oh, it wasn't a case of an innocent man's being convicted. How I wish that it were. My father was a criminal and a desperate one. My mother died when I was twelve, and then I was free to pursue my own course.

I finished high school. How I ever did, I cannot see. I think it took more courage in those trying years than it ever took on any battlefield anywhere.

As I went about my mode of life, working in the afternoons and early mornings in order that I might go to school, I pretended not to hear the people whisper as I passed, "There goes Tim Brown's boy". I held my head higher and went my way, pushing these thoughts to the back of my mind to ponder over when I went to bed at night.

My friends during my high school years were very few. In fact, I think that I can truthfully say that I had no real friends during that period.

I never had any opportunities as others did. That was just one of the many things of which my life was deprived. Once, I remember, my English teacher gave me the leading part in our class play. How happy I was! At last I had a chance—a chance to show the world I was somebody—that I could do something even if I was the son of a criminal. I was doomed for disappointment. My hopes descended in mid-air because when the leading girl was selected she simply refused to play opposite a criminal's son. What else then was there for me to do but to give up my part in the play? I couldn't blame the girl. Could you?

I guess most people thought it was queer of me to continue school as practically all the students displayed their thoughts of me. Many boys confronted by my hardships would have stopped—but not me—I kept on. What gave me the courage? Well, I'll tell you. During all these years of darkness there was one light that shone through and showed me the way—one light that kept me going from day to day—that was faith in God. I admit that at times I thought even He had forgotten me, but now I know that He never forgets.

I didn't even have a sweetheart, like most boys, to take to the corner drug store on Saturday nights. I could hear the girls whisper as I walked around the school campus, "He looks O. K., but his father's a murderer." I imagine though that if I had been in their place I'd have said the same thing. It's just human nature to be that way. What girl would want to go out with me?

All these things along with wanting to do my part, with the hopes that I could go somewhere and forget my past, constituted my decision to join the Army after Pearl Harbor was bombed.

At first my army life was entirely different from my old life. I was really happy at this camp far from my hometown. Then, when I began to be shipped from camp to camp, I was always meeting some of those boys whom I had known in the past. True, they were friendlier to some extent now, but I could still see it in their actions that they were thinking of my father.

Before I went overseas I even went out with some girls. I could have loved some of them, but always I couldn't deceive them. When I thought that they were beginning to like me, I would tell them of my father. I had to because I knew that they would have to know some day. Always it made a difference with the girl. She didn't like me any more.

Then I was sent overseas—to England first and then to France. It was there in France, they say, that I risked my life to save another soldier's life. I don't deserve this medal for that. I'm sure that any other American boy would have done the same. The boy I saved was a classmate of mine in high school. That made no difference to me. I would have done the same if he had been my best friend.

I kept on going, fighting, until one day two German bullets found their mark—in my body.

As I lie here now in this hospital somewhere in America, I cannot remember any of the things that happened after I was wounded. They say that it was two weeks after I was wounded before I reported at camp. I've tried my best to think of what happened after I was wounded, but I can't. I can think and account for all my life except when it comes to the singing of the bullets that hit my body—then my memory leaves me. It is as if something has blotted out those few weeks of my life from my memory.

It was only yesterday that I heard a doctor just outside the door of my room say, "He'll not live another week." Now as I think of those words, it makes me happy. I want to die. I have nothing to live for. Death will be a reward for me.

Here come two nurses now with my medicine. Medicine only relieves my pain temporarily. They are talking to each other now. Did I hear one say, "Marie"? Marie, that sounds so familiar to me. She gave me my medicine and then departed from the room. Still, I cannot get the word Marie out of my mind. My mind is beginning to whirl, and I'm repeating, "Marie, Marie, Marie."

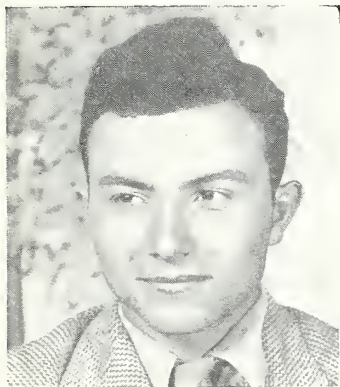

All of a sudden out of the darkness is coming to me my memory of those weeks after I was wounded. It's clear now. Oh! Marie, how could I ever forget you?

For the first time in a great many years I think I'm going to cry. There are tears rolling down my cheeks now as I think of those blessed two weeks.

I remember now wandering off after I was wounded—just walking on and on, not minding the pain that was becoming almost deadening. I remember stumbling into the French farmer's house. It was there that I found my Marie. She is only seventeen, but she nursed and cared for me with a mother's love. She can see no more now out of one of her beautiful brown eyes because of me. She went to a nearby village to get the village doctor for me, and it was there that a fragment of a bombed building hit her in the eye. Yes, Marie lost part of herself for me. Yes me! Joe Brown—the son of a criminal. It makes no difference to Marie who my father is. She loves me, and I love her more than words can tell. I can remember promising her I'd come back for her as soon as I was well.

I must have become unconscious soon after I went back to camp. They found my back in terrible condition because I had not had expert medical care at once. That is why I'm here now.

How could I ever forget those two weeks—the happiest two weeks of my whole life even if I did suffer? Why am I crying now? I'm sure it's because I'm so happy. You may think it's silly to cry when you're happy, but if you only knew how much this means to me you'd understand. I know now that I shall not die. I shall live to face the tomorrow. Why should I die anyway? Now, I have something for which to live. I'm going back to France some day, and I'm praying that day will be soon, going back to France to my Marie. I know that I'll go. I know that she'll be waiting, because I have faith in the future, faith in Marie, and faith in God.

As Told By A Rose

By MARY CORNELIA SMITH
Eighth Grade

How happy I am! Today I was selected to be one of the rosebuds in the B. F. Grady High School wreath for Margaret Williams. All the flowers at the florist coveted the honor. Pinkie Carnation was so jealous of me because I was chosen. She complained that she would probably be used in a wreath for someone who was not good like Margaret. I told her not to worry—that there would be other important funerals—that she might be used in a design for some great statesman. Still she envied me.

"Do you know," she asked, "Why this Margaret Williams is so important?" Then she related a story about how unselfish and kind Margaret was. She always considered the other person first and herself last. Her deep devotion to the members of her family, to the members of her class, and to her many friends was her most beautiful quality.

Margaret had ambition too, Pinkie told me. Even though she had poor health and missed probably a third of every school term, she studied at home and kept ahead of her class. She had determination to go to school whenever she was able. Many times her father carried her through mud to meet the school bus. Never did she give up in self-pity. Her determination to succeed made her, even in spite of all obstacles, the valedictorian of her class.

Pinkie also told me that Margaret did not limit her activities to class work alone. She was on the Debating Team, a member of the Home Economics Club, Assistant Librarian, a Beta Club officer, and a Girl Scout. In her Junior year she was chief Marshal at Commencement. During her senior year she was secretary and treasurer of her class, business manager of "The Overflow," and Valedictorian.

How I wish I could have known her better—this sweet little flower, striving to live in a world of weeds. But she did not fail. God looked down from His Heavenly throne and selected her to bloom for Him in Heaven.

Now I am more than happy. I, a white rose, have the distinction of being one of the flowers thrown on the casket to go to sleep with Margaret. It is an honor, for in the casket is buried a lot of sweetness, a lot of goodness, and a lovely character!

$3,532.05	$11,550.72	$8,086.69	3440 Hours	$8,699.16

Our Chapter entered an opening and closing contest in District 11. Nelson Kornegay was one of the winners. He was made District Treasurer.

William O'Quinn entered the Impromptu Speaking Contest in District 11 and won first place.

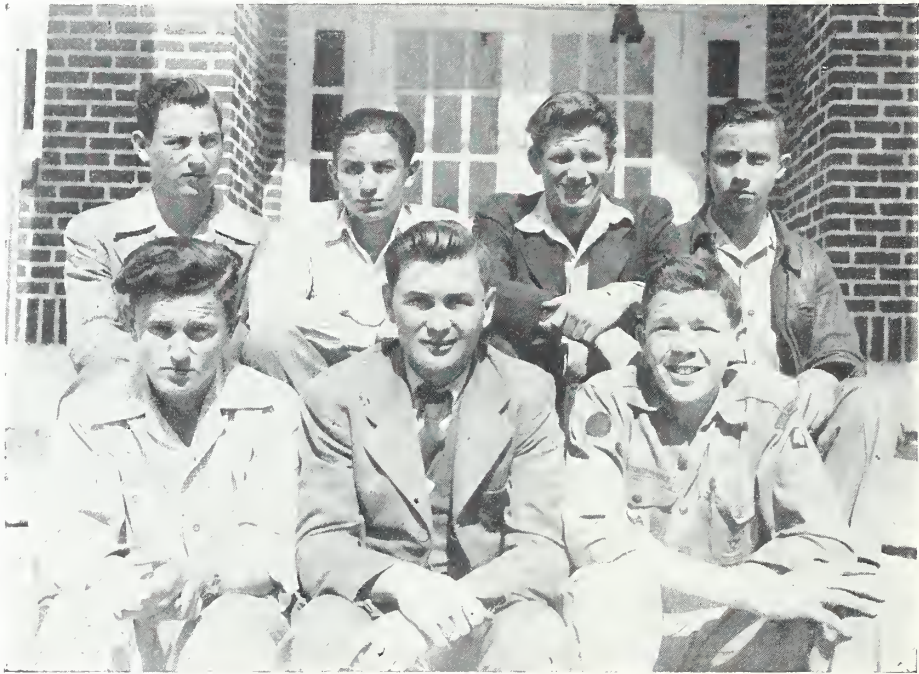

Bernard Kornegay, E. T. Kornegay, and Henry Waters entered a Seed Judging Contest at Rose Hill, N. C. The boys had 57 different types of seed to identify. E. T. Kornegay won third place in this district contest.

In April Edgar Murphy and Kermit Grady will enter their beef calves in the Fat Stock Show in Kinston and also in Kenansville.

The F. F. A. Chapter purchased and transplanted on the campus 6 Stuart Pecan Trees.

Among the things constructed by our boys this year are: swine feeders, outdoor furniture, wagon bodies, trailers, cabinets, inside doors, chisels, chick brooders, step ladders, end tables, what-nots, ironing boards, magazine racks.

On the whole our chapter has made splendid progress this year.

The B. F. Grady Beta Club has been more progressive this year than ever before.

Our projects have been:

1. Painting lower hall and principal's office.
2. Keeping dressing rooms clean.
3. Preparing auditorium for shows and plays.
4. Sponsoring shows.
5. Organizing a club in Pink Hill High School.

Kenansville Beta Club and Pink Hill prospects were invited to a party at the school. Refreshments were served and a movie shown. About 50 people were present.

Two of our members, Isabelle Goodson and Mittie Ruth Wallace, attended the State Beta Club Convention in Winston-Salem.

Library

Wonderful progress has been made in our Library. Although our space is limited, we are still adding books to our collection. In the last four years the number of books has more than doubled. At present we have over 1500 books. These consist of a wide variety—fiction, travel, biography, history, science, philosophy, fine arts, and reference. In our reference collection we have four sets of encyclopedias, dictionaries, world almanacs, and other books useful to the students.

Our Library subscribes to 26 of America's best magazines. The New York Times is one of our most popular newspapers.

Student Assistants, under the supervision of our trained Librarian, Mrs. Alice Davis, are doing splendid work in the Library. Mr. E. D. Edgerton, our Principal, has shown keen interest and is responsible for its growth.

We are hoping to have a more spacious Library room and reading room to meet the increasing needs of our Library.

OUR OBJECTIVES

1. To promote the welfare of children and youth in home, school, church, and community.
2. To raise the standards of home life.
3. To bring into close relation the home and school that parents and teachers may cooperate intelligently in the training of the child.
4. To build stronger bodies. (To accomplish this, new equipment, costing $1,500.00, has been purchased for the new lunch room project.) Emerson said, "The first wealth is health."

How Do You Know?

(An Essay on Love)

By EVELYN KORNEGAY

"How do you know when you're in love?" they ask. If you really are, you don't have to worry about that question. It's a wonderful feeling to be in love—a feeling that will live as long as you do. Earthly love seems to be a miniature of Heavenly love. It's great, whether you are loved in return or not. There are many symptoms. These differ according to the mood or to the persons afflicted. Sometimes they're gloomy and blue; sometimes, gay and dreamy-eyed; other times, indifferent and monchalant. Whatever the symptoms, they aren't all that counts. You might feel that you liked more than one boy (or girl) and couldn't decide which one you liked most. To me that seems to be a sign that it isn't really love—only "puppy love." It would be hard to explain to a person not in love just how you feel when you are. You don't fall in love because you want to. You fall and then find it out! After that, there's not much you can do about your side of the story. You'll probably decide it's up to the other person. Yes, how do you know you're in love? If you're really in love, you'll find it out. There's no special "way" to find out. You just wake up to the fact that you are lonely if he's out of sight and that you'd feel very much like dying if you ever found out he was in love with another girl—instead of you!

A Close Shave

By BOYCE WALLACE

What gave me the idea that I needed a shave?—just a mere boy of thirteen years. Well, boys do think of crazy and impossible things. At least I do. So, armed with the thoughts that I'd soon be a man, I proceeded with the work of shaving.

First, I gave my face a good washing. Then I started applying what I supposed to be shaving cream. Strange—it did not lather. Well, no wonder it wouldn't lather—it was tooth paste.

I found that soap was much better. It did lather. After spreading lather all over my face, nose, mouth, and shirt, I was ready to start. I found Daddy's old straight razor which was really very long and sharp.

The whole thing lasted for about thirty minutes—cutting, scraping, and bleeding. Thirty minutes too long, I should say too, because part of my nose, chin, and left ear were all missing.

Boyce deserves the Congressional Medal of Honor for bravery above and beyond the call of duty.

OUR SECRET

It wasn't at all early one Saturday night as I was on my way home after a visit with my best girl. I was clipping off about seventy-five or eighty, I guess, when all of a sudden out of the shadows of a parked car stumbled the figure of a man. It fell in front of my Ford. I applied my brakes, but it was too late; I felt the jar as the wheels rolled over the body. As quickly as I could I jumped out and ran back to the sprawled figure on the highway. The wheels had passed directly over his chest, completely crushing him.

My mind was in a whirl. Something told me to get back into my car and take off just as if nothing had happened, but then I knew they would find out anyway. About that time I saw the headlights of a car coming down the road. Quickly, almost as if by some force, I jumped behind the parked automobile. By some miracle, though, the cneeming car turned off on a side road just before it got to me.

Without looking ba k at the body any more, I ran to my car, got in, and left. As I drove along all the way home I could still see the figure falling in front of my car.

Finally, I reached home, turned into the drive, and switched off the lights. I had to go through Mom and Dad's room to get to mine. The little accident had made me later than usual. Although I crept stealthily through their room, I woke Dad up. He turned on the light and said, "You're a little late, son, have any trouble?"

The words tore at my already aching heart as though it would kill me, but quickly I said, "No, I'm just a bum, I guess, keeping the poor girl up half the night." We both laughed and I went on to my bedroom.

As I entered the room, there sat her picture on the dresser. She's the kind of girl of which a fellow is proud. I never kept anything from her; anything I knew in twenty minutes she knew it too. But Now!

I undressed and went to bed, but everytime I closed my eyes I could see the murder I had committed.

The next morning I was down to breakfast on time to my family's surprise. We got dressed and were just leaving for church when the morning paper came.

Dad grabbed it and went to the car. As he unfolded it, he said, "Oh, oh, another hit and run case."

I could feel the blood rush to my face, but I pretended to listen to what he was reading. The article went on to say, "In the late hour of this morning a car was parked beside highway number 111 with a flat tire. Near it was the mangled body of a man whom police identified as Mr. Paul Stetson. It is believed that the vietim had been accidentally killed when he stepped in front of a passing car. As yet no clues have been found concerning the identity of the hit-and-run driver."

Little did I realize last night that I had killed Eva's father. She had told me about his going to some kind of meeting, but I didn't think any more about it.

I drove into the church yard and went in, but I doubt if I heard a dozen words the preacher said. That evening I went to Eva's as I usually did on Sunday, but nothing was as usual. I gave her my sympathy and tried to comfort her, but I seemed to be talking in cireles, so I soon left.

During the next week I grew ten years older. At night when everything got still I thought I would go crazy. Mrs. Stetson's husband—my sweetheart's Dad—was gone, and I had killed him!

Friday night I could stand it no longer; so I went to Eva's. When I got there, they were eating supper but instead of three there were only two at the table. It seemed terribly quiet without Mr. Stetson, because he was always teasing me.

After supper Eva and I went into the parlor. Then for the first time in what seemed to be ages, things were normal again.

We talked about everything except the past week. Everytime I started to mention my part in it, she would change the subject.

Finally I said, "Eva, I've got something I must tell you. Then you can call the police if you want to, but I've lived a lie long enough."

With tears in her eyes, she begged me not to explain anything. She said, "Bill, last Sunday evening you plainly showed me what had happened. I knew it all the time, and you have suffered more than I have."

Then I told her the entire story. When I finished she said, "Bill, we have made each other several promises. I want your promise that you'll never tell anyone about this except me."

I promised her I wouldn't. She said, "Nobody will ever know except you and me."

That night as I went to bed I thanked God for a girl with a mind and heart big enough to forgive and forget such a tragedy as that!
